Executive-legislative relations

Legislation adopted by parliament requires the assent of the Head of State	Yes Sources: Since the constitutional amendment of 12 March 2009, Article 34 of the Constitution no longer refers to the approval of an act (where ‘approval’ denotes the assent of the Grand Duke); instead, reference is only made to the promulgation of an act (the procedure by which the Grand Duke attests to the content of an act and orders its publication and implementation).

	Article 46 of the Constitution mandates that the assent of the Chamber of Deputies is required for each law
Number of times the Head of State declined to give assent to legislation, per year	Not applicable (2025)
Consequences when the Head of State declines to give assent to legislation	Not applicable Notes: Since the amendments to the Constitution of 12 March 2009, article 34 no longer mentions legal assent (i.e., the consent of the Grand Duke), but simply the promulgation of the law (i.e., the act by which the Grand Duke notes the content of the law and orders its publication and implementation). Article 46 of the Constitution mandates that the assent of the Chamber of Deputies is required for each law
Final decision when parliament and the Head of State do not agree	Not applicable
