

Open Data

The parliament has opened its database for free use. The aim: to make parliamentary work even more transparent and accessible to all and encourage collaborative use.

700,000 items of data for free use

As of the start of the parliamentary year 2022, the Chamber of Deputies has become even more transparent: the Parliament is making a large proportion of its data available for free use.

Over 700,000 items of data from the Chamber of Deputies will be available on the Luxembourg government's Open Data platform [\[link\]](#) to encourage free use and collaborative re-use. Developers, researchers, journalists, and other interested parties may produce their own applications or statistics on the basis of this data.

To begin with, the Chamber of Deputies made the following data available:

the transparency register (since it was introduced in 2022)

the list of parliamentary questions (all data)

the composition of committees, international delegations, and decision-making bodies (Conference of Presidents, Executive Office) (since 2009)

the deputies currently in office former deputies (since 1998)

attendance at plenary sessions (since 2018)

Next, by the end of 2022, the following data will be accessible:

the list of speeches by deputies (since 2013)

votes (since 2018)

the list of committee meetings (since 2018)

the list of motions

the list of government bills/private member's bills

the list of European directives and their transposition into national law

The spirit of the 'Open Data' policy is to provide data that goes back as far back as possible. Data are updated every month.
