

Overview of our outcomes and data

Our work is based on objective data to ensure banks are treated in a consistent way. Through rigorous analyses, we produce concrete outcomes that keep Europe's banks safe. For example, every year we define risks and priorities for supervisors to focus on, collect and analyse data on banks' activities, conduct banks' regular health checks and produce many thematic reports.

Assessing banks' risk profiles

The outcome of banks' regular health check – the Supervisory Review and Evaluation Process (SREP) – is one of our key reports. It provides insights into how banks are performing when it comes to their business models, internal governance, risks to capital and liquidity.

Collecting data on Europe's banks

We publish statistics on various aspects of a bank – including capital adequacy, profitability and liquidity, just to give a few examples. These data are crucial for proper analysis and decision-making.

Public consultations

We organise public consultations to seek the views of interested EU citizens, market participants and other stakeholders on key supervisory initiatives, guidance and policies before they are finalised and implemented. This allows us to hear from the people who are affected by our work.

Outlining supervisory priorities and risks

Every year, we identify the main risks we expect banks to face in the coming three years. The results of the SREP help us to identify these focus areas, which, in turn, guide how we allocate resources and plan our activities.

Disclosing our activities each year

Every year around March, we publish a report on how we carried out our supervisory tasks the previous year. The report is presented to the European Parliament at a public hearing and is a testament to our accountability.
